

About Rose...

In her early years, Rose Koob's family lived in a log farmhouse built by her parents near Paradise Hill, Saskatchewan. Her parents were immigrants from Austria. Times were tough as she grew up during the Great Depression. She first attended a one-room elementary school, then a high school and finally teachers' college. Later she started teaching in many places in Saskatchewan and Alberta. She eventually met Frank Koob, who was also a teacher. They married in 1971 and moved to Cold Lake. She stopped teaching when two children were born to the family. She accepted the responsibility of helping out with sacristy work, and later became the sacristan at Assumption Church. This occupied some of Rose's free time from 1975 to 2015 -- forty years. Her other enjoyments included a huge vegetable and flower garden, and regular baking in the kitchen. Yard work and housework were her passion. Rose also enjoyed sewing, knitting and tatting lace doilies. Rose won a battle with cancer in 2010. In 2011 Rose had the misfortune of an ulcer appearing on her ankle that persisted for the rest of her life, significantly limiting her mobility. In 2017, Rose's health declined. For the following years, Frank took care of her in their home. She was happiest in her home with Frank, helping out with chores, and cheerfully fighting on until the end of her days.
